Nota Bene: Andrew Motion recently lamented how difficult it was to teach literature today. Shakespeare or Shaw, for example, would assume a knowledge of classical history and mythology in their audiences that we tend not to have.

Let bestselling author Caroline Taggart be your Oracle as she guides you through all the useful, interesting and colourful bits, including:

- Classical languages (but not ad nauseam)
- Religion and mythology, by Jove
- Crete: history, heroes and a hulking great minotaur
- Greek history: little achievements like the birth of democracy
- Roman history: what did the Romans do for us?
- The posh stuff: Classical literature
- The fancy stuff: architecture and art
- The clever stuff I: maths, science and inventions
- The clever stuff II: philosophy and the 'liberal arts'
- A bit of light relief: the games

Post Scriptum: Part of the bestselling series that includes I Before E (Except After C) – over 780,000 copies sold across the series – this is an entertaining romp through antiquity that ensures you will never miss a bona fide classical reference again.
