Mister Mourao is an architect who became an artist with a tendency for obsessive drawing, his work has appeared on the New Yorker, Washington Post and numerous other publications. Armed only with a black pen, paper and time, he draws cities and other architectural meanderings. He started to draw at a very young age but it was after studying architecture that he began to see drawing as a way to think and express concepts. At first he filled in his notebooks with the architectural project in hand but gradually his imagination took over and page after page of fantastical constructions appeared. As you delve into his pages you will discover:

IMAGINE

Vasco Mourao started with the question 'What if ...?' and drew from there.

DENSITY

Departing from the real world, these drawings are incredibly intricate. We hope you get lost in them!

BEND

These drawings are twisty and bendy.

BREAK

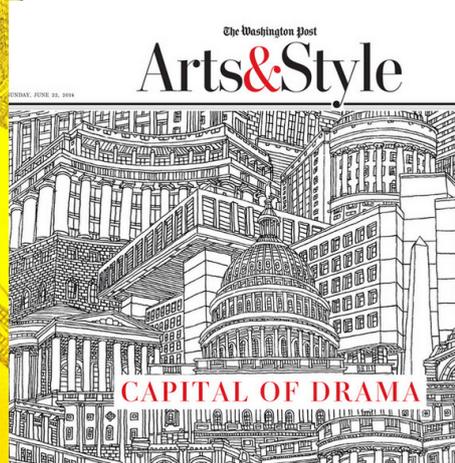

After bending the logical step was to break, to explode the architectural constructions in to individual pieces.

ZEPPELINS

Loosely inspired by Hayao Miyazaki's Howl's Moving Castle.

I'm Mister Mourao (aka Vasco Mourao), an architect turned into an illustrator with a tendency for obsessive drawing.

Only with a black pen and time, I draw cities and other architectural meandering.

Inhabiting a place between fine art and illustration, I work for editorial commissions as well creating exclusive artworks for private clients.
